

Transparency International's Global Corruption Report 2007 brings together scholars, legal professionals and civil society activists from around the world to examine how, why and where corruption mars judicial processes, and to reflect on remedies for corruption-tainted systems. It focuses on judges and courts, situating them within the broader justice system and exploring the impact of judicial corruption on human rights, economic development and governance.

Two problems are analysed: political interference to pressure judges for rulings in favour of political or economic interests, including in corruption cases; and petty bribery involving court personnel. The result is a thorough analysis of how judicial independence and judicial accountability, two concepts key to the promotion of judicial integrity, can be bolstered to tackle corruption in judicial systems.

Included are thirty-seven country case studies; recommendations for judges, political powers, prosecutors, lawyers and civil society; and sixteen empirical studies of corruption in various sectors, including the judiciary.

Transparency International (TI) is the civil society organisation leading the global fight against corruption. Through more than ninety chapters worldwide and an international secretariat in Berlin, Germany, TI raises awareness of the damaging effects of corruption, and works with partners in government, business and civil society to develop and implement effective measures to tackle it. For more information go to: www.transparency.org

Global Corruption Report 2007

TRANSPARENCY INTERNATIONAL

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS

Cambridge, New York, Melbourne, Madrid, Cape Town, Singapore, São Paulo

Cambridge University Press

The Edinburgh Building, Cambridge CB2 8RU, UK

Published in the United States of America by Cambridge University Press, New York

www.cambridge.org

Information on this title: www.cambridge.org/9780521700702

© Transparency International 2007

This publication is in copyright. Subject to statutory exception and to the provisions of relevant collective licensing agreements, no reproduction of any part may take place without the written permission of Cambridge University Press.

First published 2007

Printed in the United Kingdom at the University Press, Cambridge

A catalogue record for this publication is available from the British Library

ISBN 978-0-521-70070-2

Cambridge University Press has no responsibility for the persistence or accuracy of URLs for external or third-party internet websites referred to in this book, and does not guarantee that any content on such websites is, or will remain, accurate or appropriate.

Edited by Diana Rodriguez and Linda Ehrichs

Contributing editors: Robin Hodess, Victoria Jennett and Diane Mak

Copy-edited by Michael Griffin

Every effort has been made to verify the accuracy of the information contained in this report, including allegations. All information was believed to be correct as of August 2006. Nevertheless, Transparency International cannot guarantee the accuracy and the completeness of the contents. Nor can Transparency International accept responsibility for the consequences of its use for other purposes or in other contents. Contributions to the Global Corruption Report 2007 by authors external to Transparency International do not necessarily reflect the views of Transparency International or its national chapters.

Contents

Contributors	xi
Acknowledgements	xiv
Preface	xvi
Huguette Labelle
Foreword	xix
Kamal Hossain
Executive summary: key judicial corruption problems	xxi
Transparency International
Part one: Comparative analysis of judicial corruption
1	Introducing the problem
	Corruption within the judiciary: causes and remedies 3
	Mary Noel Pepys
	How prevalent is bribery in the judicial sector? 11
	Transparency International
2	Independence, political interference and corruption
	Judicial independence and corruption 15
	Susan Rose-Ackerman
	Economic growth, certainty in the law and judicial independence 24
	Stefan Voigt
	Judicial elections in the United States: is corruption an issue? 26
	Roy A. Schotland
	Combating corruption and political influence in Russia's court system 31
	Tom Blass
	Corrupt judges and land rights in Zimbabwe 35
	Gugulethu Moyo
3	Accountability and competence of judges
	Judicial integrity: the accountability gap and the Bangalore Principles 40
	Greg Mayne

Corruption, accountability and the discipline of judges in Latin America Emilio J. Cárdenas and Héctor M. Chayer	44
The professionalism of judges: education, salaries and career structure in Asia Vincent Yang and Linda Ehrichs	48
Professional qualifications of the judiciary in Italy, France and Germany Carlo Guarnieri	56
The international dimensions of judicial accountability Zora Ledergerber, Gretta Fenner and Mark Pieth	62
4 The broader justice system
Judicial corruption and the broader justice system Edgardo Buscaglia	67
Mexico: the traffickers' judges Jorge Fernández Menéndez	77
Judicial corruption from the prosecution's perspective Nicholas Cowdery AM QC	79
The investigating magistrate's loss of influence in France and the effects on the fight against corruption Eva Joly	84
Lesotho Highlands Water Project: corporate pressure on the prosecution and judiciary Fiona Darroch	87
Lawyers and corruption: a view from East and Southern Africa Arnold Tsunga and Don Deya	92
5 Courts, culture and corruption
Judicial corruption in the context of legal culture Marina Kurkchivan	99
Culture and corruption in Italy Gherardo Colombo	107
The media and judicial corruption Geoffrey Robertson QC	108
Civil society's role in combating judicial corruption in Central America Katya Salazar and Jacqueline de Gramont	115
Gender and corruption in the administration of justice Celestine Nyamu-Musembi	121

The ‘other 90 per cent’: how NGOs combat corruption in non-judicial justice systems	129
Stephen Golub
6 Lessons learned about fighting judicial corruption
Fighting judicial corruption: a comparative perspective from Latin America	138
Linn Hammergren
Sub-national reform efforts: the Lagos state experience	146
Oluyemi Osinbajo
The rule of law and judicial corruption in China: half-way over the Great Wall	151
Keith Henderson
Assisting judicial reform: lessons from UNODC’s experience	159
Fabrizio Sarrica and Oliver Stolpe
Part two: Country reports on judicial corruption
7 Country reports on judicial corruption
Introduction	167
Transparency International
Algeria’s judiciary: from bad beginnings to an uncertain future	171
Fayçal Métaoui
Azerbaijan’s yawning gap between reforms on paper and in practice	175
Rena Safaraliev
Bangladesh: justice in disarray	179
S. I. Laskar
Corruption in the judiciary of Cambodia	183
Samantha Ford and Theary C. Seng
Chile’s partial success	187
Davor Harasic
Increased transparency helps curb corruption in Costa Rica	190
Roxana Salazar and José Pablo Ramos
Croatia: still in transition	194
TI Croatia, Zagreb
Top-down control slows Czech judicial reform, despite EU impetus	197
Michal Štička

Egypt's judiciary flexes its muscles Hossam Baghat	201
Georgia's accelerated anti-corruption reforms Tamuna Karosanidze and Camrin Christensen	205
Computerised courts reduce delays in Ghana Dominic Ayine, Mechthild Ruenger and Daniel Batidam	208
Judicial corruption and the military legacy in Guatemala Carlos Melgar Peña	211
Indolence in India's judiciary TI India, New Delhi	214
Israel's Supreme Court: still making up its own mind Doron Navot	218
'Radical surgery' in Kenya's judiciary TI Kenya, Nairobi	221
Judicial corruption and impunity in Mexico Miguel Carbonell	225
Corruption within Mongolia's legal profession TI Mongolia, Ulan Bator	228
Royal power and judicial independence in Morocco Transparency Maroc, Casablanca	232
Opportunity knocks for Nepal's flawed judiciary Krishna Prasad Bhandar	236
Separation of powers in Niger Judge Djibo Abdoulaye	239
Pakistan: a tradition of judicial subservience Jawaid A. Siddiqi	243
War of attrition weakens Palestinian judiciary AMAN	248
Control of judiciary ensures impunity for Panama's elite Angélica Maytín Justiniani	252
Politics and nepotism plague Paraguay's courts Transparencia Paraguay, Asunción	255
The Philippines: Towards significant judicial reform Judge Dolores Español	258

Judicial reform in PNG in need of political will TI Papua New Guinea, Port Moresby	263
Corruption and deficiencies in the Romanian justice system Victor Alistar	267
Misappropriations mar South Africa's courts Judith February	270
Corruption in Sri Lanka's judiciary Kishali Pinto Jayawardana and J. C. Weliamuna	275
Judiciary in Turkey: rooting out corruption TI Turkey, Istanbul	278
Refining accountability and transparency in UK judicial systems Kyela Leakey	282
Zambian judiciary struggles to modernise Davies Chikalanga, Goodwell Lungu and Ngoza Yezi	287
Part three: Corruption research
8 Introduction Robin Hodess	293
9 When are judges likely to be corrupt? Stefan Voigt	296
10 Bribes, punishment and judicial immunity Ernesto Dal Bó, Pedro Dal Bó and Rafael Di Tella	302
11 Informality, legal institutions and social norms Åse Berit Grødeland	306
12 Enforcement of anti-corruption laws: the need for performance monitoring Tiernan Mennen, Eric Frye and Richard E. Messick	310
13 The Global Corruption Barometer 2006 Tom Lavers	314
14 Measuring corruption: myths and realities Daniel Kaufmann, Aart Kraay and Massimo Mastruzzi	318
15 Corruption Perceptions Index 2006 Johann Graf Lambsdorff	324

16	Bribe Payers Index 2006 Diane Mak	331
17	International business attitudes to corruption John Bray	335
18	Business corruption: speak out or take part? Tina Søreide	338
19	Specific manifestations of corruption: comparing Brazil and Russia Leon Zurawicki	342
20	Explaining patterns of corruption in the Russian regions Phyllis Dininio and Robert Orttung	346
21	Quantifying public procurement losses in the Czech Republic David Ondráčka	349
22	Identifying reticent respondents in Romanian corruption surveys Omar Azfar and Peter Murrell	352
23	ANCORAGE-NET: sharing knowledge-based solutions to corruption control Luís de Sousa and João Triães	354
24	Auditing, accountability and anti-corruption: how relevant are autonomous audit agencies? Carlos Santiso	358
	Index	363

Contributors

- Djibo Abdoulaye – TI Niger (Niamey, Niger)
- Victor Alistar – TI Romania (Bucharest, Romania)
- Dominic Ayine – Center for Public Interest Law (Accra, Ghana)
- Omar Azfar – City University of New York (New York, United States)
- Hossan Bahgat – Egyptian Initiative for Personal Rights (Cairo, Egypt)
- Daniel Batidam – Ghana Integrity Initiative (Accra, Ghana)
- Krishna Prasad Bhandari – Supreme Court of Nepal (Kathmandu, Nepal)
- Tom Blass – Foreign Policy Institute (London, United Kingdom)
- John Bray – Control Risks Group (Tokyo, Japan)
- Edgardo Buscaglia – Columbia University (New York, United States), Hoover Institution, Stanford University (Stanford, United States) and International Law and Economic Development Center
- Miguel Carbonell – Instituto de Investigaciones Jurídicas-UNAM (Mexico City, Mexico)
- Emilio J. Cárdenas – Foro de Estudios sobre la Administración de Justicia (Buenos Aires, Argentina)
- Héctor M. Chayer – Foro de Estudios sobre la Administración de Justicia (Buenos Aires, Argentina)
- Davies Chikalanga – TI Zambia (Lusaka, Zambia)
- Camrin Christensen – TI Georgia (Tbilisi, Georgia)
- Gherardo Colombo – High Court (Rome, Italy)
- Nicholas Cowdery AM QC – Director of Public Prosecutions (New South Wales, Australia)
- Ernesto Dal Bó – UC Berkeley (Berkeley, United States)
- Pedro Dal Bó – Brown University (Providence, United States)
- Fiona Darroch – Hailsham Chambers (London, United Kingdom)
- Phyllis Dininio – American University (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Jacqueline de Gramont – Due Process of Law Foundation (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Luís de Sousa – Centro de investigação e estudos de sociologia (Lisbon, Portugal)
- Don Deya – East African Law Society (Arusha, Tanzania)
- Rafael Di Tella – Harvard Business School (Boston, United States)
- Dolores Español – TI Philippines (Manila, Philippines)
- Judith February – Institute for Democracy in South Africa (Cape Town, South Africa)
- Greta Fenner – Basel Institute on Governance (Basel, Switzerland)
- Samantha Ford – University of Michigan Law School (Ann Arbor, United States)
- Eric Frye – World Bank (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Stephen Golub – University of California (Berkeley, United States)
- Johann Graf Lambsdorff – University of Passau (Passau, Germany)
- Åse Berit Grødeland – Norwegian Institute for Urban and Regional Research (Oslo, Norway)
- Carlo Guarnieri – University of Bologna (Bologna, Italy)
- Linn Hammergren – World Bank Latin America Regional Department (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Davor Harasic – TI Chile (Santiago, Chile)

- Keith Henderson – American University (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Robin Hodess – TI (Berlin, Germany)
- Kamal Hossain – Jurist, founding member of TI (Dhaka, Bangladesh)
- Kishali Pinto Jayawardana – TI Sri Lanka (Colombo, Sri Lanka)
- Eva Joly – Ministry of Justice and Ministry of Foreign Affairs (Oslo, Norway)
- Angélica Maytín Justiniani – TI Panama (Panama City, Panama)
- Tamuna Karosanidze – TI Georgia (Tbilisi, Georgia)
- Daniel Kaufmann – World Bank Institute (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Aart Kraay – World Bank Institute (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Marina Kurkchyan – Oxford University (Oxford, United Kingdom)
- Tom Lavers – TI (Berlin, Germany)
- Kyela Leakey – Queen Mary, University of London (London, United Kingdom)
- Zora Ledergerber – Basel Institute on Governance (Basel, Switzerland)
- Goodwell Lungu – TI Zambia (Lusaka, Zambia)
- Diane Mak – TI (Berlin, Germany)
- Massimo Mastruzzi – World Bank Institute (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Greg Mayne – Human Rights Institute of the International Bar Association (London, United Kingdom)
- Jorge Fernández Menéndez – Imagen Informativa (Mexico City, Mexico)
- Tiernan Mennen – World Bank (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Richard E. Messick – World Bank (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Fayçal Métaoui – El Watan (Algiers TK, Algeria)
- Guguletho Moyo – International Bar Association (London, United Kingdom)
- Jack Muriuki – TI Kenya (Nairobi, Kenya)
- Peter Murrell – University of Maryland (College Park, United States)
- Doron Navot – TI Israel (Tel Aviv, Israel)
- Celestine Nyamu-Musembi – Institute of Development Studies (Brighton, United Kingdom)
- David Ondráčka – TI Czech Republic (Prague, Czech Republic)
- Robert Orttung – American University (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Oluyemi Osinbajo – Lagos State Ministry of Justice (Ikeja, Nigeria)
- Carlos Melgar Peña – TI Guatemala (Guatemala City, Guatemala)
- Mary Noel Pepys – Senior Attorney (San Francisco, United States)
- Mark Pieth – Basel Institute on Governance (Basel, Switzerland)
- José Pablo Ramos – San José, Costa Rica
- Geoffrey Robertson QC – Doughty Street Chambers (London, United Kingdom)
- Susan Rose-Ackerman – Yale Law School (New Haven, United States)
- Mechthild Ruenger – Deutsche Gesellschaft für Technische Zusammenarbeit (Eschborn, Germany)
- Rena Safaralievá – TI Azerbaijan (Baku, Azerbaijan)
- Katya Salazar Luzula – Due Process of Law Foundation (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Roxana Salazar – San José, Costa Rica
- Carlos Santiso – Department for International Development (London, United Kingdom)
- Fabrizio Sarrica – United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (Vienna, Austria)
- Roy Schotland – Georgetown University Law Center (Washington, D.C., United States)
- Theary Seng – Center for Social Development (Phnom Penh, Cambodia)
- Jawaid Siddiqi – Supreme Court (Islamabad, Pakistan)

- Tina Søreide – Chr. Michelsen Institute (Bergen, Norway)
- Michal Štička – TI Czech Republic (Prague, Czech Republic)
- Oliver Stolpe – United Nations Office on Drugs and Crime (Vienna, Austria)
- João Triães – Centro de investigação e estudos de sociologia (Lisbon, Portugal)
- Arnold Tsunga – Law Society of Zimbabwe and Zimbabwe Lawyers for Human Rights (Harare, Zimbabwe)
- Stefan Voigt – Philipps University Marburg (Marburg, Germany)
- J.C. Weliamuna – TI Sri Lanka (Colombo, Sri Lanka)
- Vincent Cheng Yang – Macao University of Science and Technology (Macao, China)
- Ngoza Yezi – TI Zambia (Lusaka, Zambia)
- Leon Zurawicki – University of Massachusetts-Boston (Boston, United States)

Acknowledgements

The editors of the Global Corruption Report 2007 would like to thank all the individuals who made the production of this report possible, above all our authors.

A profound thank you to the many colleagues across the Transparency International movement, from the Secretariat in Berlin to national chapters around the world, whose ideas and advice helped make our task easier and more enjoyable. TI national chapters deserve special mention for their contribution to the revised country reports section, which this year focuses on our cover theme, judicial corruption, allowing us to provide in-depth analysis of the topic.

Thanks are also due to the many people outside of the TI network who generously devoted their time and energy to the report by reviewing contributions and provided input: David Abouem, Fikret Adaman, Rebecca Adams, Jens Andvig, Frank Anechiarico, Ben Aris, Livingston Armytage, Daniel Bach, Sefik Alp Bahadir, Nestor Baragli, Manuhua Barcham, Jeremy Baskin, Boris Begovic, Predrag Bejakovic, Joxerramon Bengoetxea, Matthias Boeckmann, Petr Bohata, Karen Brewer, A.J. Brown, Thomas Bruneau, Marin Bull, Sheila Camerer, Ali Carkoglu, Charles Caruso, Myriam Catusse, Justice Arthur Chaskalson, Nubia Uruena Cortes, Julius Court, Madeleine Crohn, Aurel Croissant, Dianne Cullinane, Nicolas Dassen, Tina de Vries, Joelle Dehasse, Phyllis Dininio, Gideon Doron, Yves-Marie Doublet, Mona El-Ghobashy, Desmond Fernando, Eduardo Flores-Trejo, Jane Fuller, Marc Galander, Mamoudou Gazibo, Peter Gerash, Charles Goredema, Dorota Gozdecka, Laura Hamidova, Barry Hancock, Sean Hanley, Clement M. Henry, Paul Heywood, Bert Hofman, Judge Keith Hollis, Jonathan Hopkin, Sorin Ionita, Richard Jeffries, Michael Johnston, John-Mary Kauzya, George Kegoro, Jennifer Khor, Rachel Kleinfeld, Jos Kuper, Evelyn Lance, Peter Larmour, Martin Lau, Azzedine Layachi, Nelson Ledsky, Justice Claire L'Heureux Dube, Andrew Le Sueur, Henrik Lindroth, John Lobsinger, Joan Lofgren, Xiaobo Lu, Cephas Lumina, Stephen Ma, Kate Malleson, Robert Manguirer, Ernst Markel, Mike McGovern, Richard Messick, Arnauld Miguet, Stephen Morris, Olga Nazario, David Nelken, Jim Newell, Colm O'Conneide, Madalene O'Donnel, Tunde Ogowewo, Bill O'Neill, Anja Osei, Raschid Ouissa, Justice Sandra Oxner, Michael Palmer, Irene Petras, Tomislav Pintaric, Laure-Hélène Piron, Heiko Pleines, Miroslav Prokopijevic, Gabriella Quimson, Mouin Rabbani, Monty Raphael, Ekkehard Reimer, Peter Rooke, Richard Rose, François Roubaud, Miguel Gutiérrez Saxe, Wilfried Schärf, Anja Desiree Senz, Aqil Shah, Rachel Sieder, Judy Smith-Hoehn, Bruno Speck, Christopher Speckhard, Robert Springborg, Joe Spurlock, Joe Stern, Madani Tall, Gopakumar K. Thampi, Vincent Turbat, Nubia Uruena, Shyama Venkateswar, Evelyn Villareal, Maren Voges, Lynn Welchman, Laurence Whitehead and Claude Zullo.

We are particularly grateful to the members of our Editorial Advisory Panel who helped us shape the book: Susan Rose-Ackerman, Hugh Barnes, Jeremy Carver, Param Cumaraswamy, Edgardo Buscgalia, Linn Hammergren, Keith Henderson, Michael Hershman, Kamal Hossain, Valeria Merino Dirani, Akere Muna, Judge Barry O’Keefe, Juan Enrique Vargas and Frank Vogl.

Thanks to Kyela Leakey, who worked on the TI Checklist that informs our recommendations and who, throughout the editing process, patiently offered her expertise on the recommendations to the book. Thank you also to Caroline Tingay and Naneh Hovhannisyian for their work during the early stages of commissioning the report, and to GCR interns Diane Mak, Dorothee Stieglitz and Caroline Zöllner.

Thanks especially to Linda Ehrichs, contributing editor of this volume of the Global Corruption Report.

We are grateful to our new publisher, Cambridge University Press, for their enthusiasm for our publication, and the law firm Covington and Burling for defamation advice. Finally, thanks to our copy editor, Michael Griffin, for his diligence and talent.

The Global Corruption Report receives special funding support from the government of Germany.

Diana Rodriguez
Editor, Global Corruption Report

Preface

Huguette Labelle, Chair of Transparency International

Transparency International's Global Corruption Report focuses on the judicial system this year for one simple reason: the fight against corruption depends upon it. The expanding arsenal of anti-corruption weapons includes new national and international laws against corruption that rely on fair and impartial judicial systems for enforcement. Where judicial corruption occurs, the damage can be pervasive and extremely difficult to reverse. Judicial corruption undermines citizens' morale, violates their human rights, harms their job prospects and national development and depletes the quality of governance. A government that functions on behalf of all its citizens requires not only the rule of law, but an independent and effective judiciary to enforce it to the satisfaction of all parties.

The professionals that make up the judicial system can use their skills, knowledge and influence to privilege truth and benefit the general public, and the vast majority do. But they can also abuse these qualities, using them to enrich themselves or to improve their careers and influence. For whatever reason and whether petty or gross, corruption in the judiciary ensures that corruption remains beyond the law in every other field of government and economic activity in which it may have taken root. Indeed, without an independent judiciary, graft effectively becomes the new 'rule of law'.

Transparency International has been tackling judicial corruption in many countries and on a number of levels for several years now. Its work has included analysing the phenomenon through research and surveys; scrutinising the judicial appointments processes in courts; promoting standards of ethical conduct in the justice sector; and lobbying through national chapters and civil society organisations for laws to block the most blatant avenues for manipulating the judiciary.

Transparency International would have achieved nothing in this field on its own. This volume brings together the testimony of dozens of the organisations and individuals who have dedicated their skills and efforts to ridding the justice institutions of corruption's scourge. Many authors are from the human rights field. This is only fitting since the fight against corruption and the fight for human rights can only be mutually reinforcing.

As this volume attests, many factors mitigate corruption and many steps can be taken to ensure that judicial professionals avoid engaging in it. These include accountability mechanisms that increase the chances that judicial corruption will be detected and penalised; safeguards against interference from the spheres of politics, business and organised crime; processes of transparency that allow the media, civil society and the public to scrutinise their own judicial systems; and decent conditions of employment that convince judicial staff to remain on the straight and narrow. A judge working in a jurisdiction where the profession is respected and well compensated is less likely to exact a bribe from a litigant in a land or family dispute than one working in less favourable conditions.

Many inspiring individuals buck the graft trend, even in jurisdictions plagued by mediocrity, petty corruption and fear of intimidation. While this book was in production, members of Transparency International's global movement gathered to pay tribute to Dr Ana Cecilia Magallanes Cortez, winner of the TI 2006 Integrity Award and the leading force in the prosecution of some 1,500 members of the criminal organisation headed by Vladimiro Montesinos, ex-head of intelligence and intimate associate of former Peruvian president Alberto Fujimori, who is currently fighting extradition on charges of gross corruption.

Dr Magallanes' work led to the arrest of some of the most respected figures in the Peruvian judiciary, including her own boss, the former federal public prosecutor, several Supreme Court justices, and judges and prosecutors at various levels. She has become the inspiration for a new generation of judges and prosecutors in Latin America. This book is dedicated to her and to the many other individuals in the justice sector who refuse to be cowed or compromised in their pursuit of justice. We must learn from them how the judiciary, and all those who engage with it, can contribute to a society that honours integrity and refuses to tolerate corruption in any form.

Foreword

By Dr Kamal Hossain

A major component of anti-corruption work has been to push for laws that criminalise different aspects of corruption. A decade or so ago international corporate bribery enjoyed tax benefits and corrupt politicians could rest easy in the knowledge that their loot would remain safe in unnamed accounts in the world's banking centres. Careful law-making at the national and international level since then has better defined and proscribed corrupt behaviour in many countries.

Nevertheless, an enormous challenge for the anti-corruption movement is to ensure that anti-corruption laws are enforced and that legal redress for injustice can be secured through a functioning judicial system. The failure of judges and the broader judiciary to meet these legitimate expectations provides a fertile breeding ground for corruption. In such environments even the best anti-corruption laws become meaningless.

The decision to focus the Global Corruption Report 2007 (GCR 2007) on the judiciary comes from its centrality to anti-corruption work. It was also informed by the work of many of the 100 national chapters that make up the Transparency International global movement. National chapter work on judicial issues takes many forms: some are working to tackle judicial corruption by monitoring judges' court attendances and the quality of their judgements; others are offering free legal advice to people embroiled in Kafkaesque processes in which bribes are demanded at every turn; and still more are commenting publicly on the calibre of candidates nominated for judgeships. In previous editions of the GCR, many of our national chapters have written about judicial corruption as a core problem in their country, arguing that pliant judges and judiciaries undermine the very anti-corruption efforts they are expected to enforce, and thereby erode the rule of law.

Part of this book is devoted to examining how judges and court staff become corrupted by external pressures. It scans the territory of jurists who for centuries have questioned how to separate the powers of government and resolve the tension between the accountability and independence of judges, viewing these issues through the lens of corruption. The report also revisits a number of cases analysed in GCR 2004, which focused on political corruption, but provides the mirror view – the corruption within a nation's legal system that allows politicians, as the perpetrators of malfeasance, to remain at large.

A second strand running through the book is the judicial corruption that ordinary people suffer around the world. This resonates particularly strongly for me, coming from Bangladesh where the executive controls the appointment, promotion, posting, transfer and discipline of all judges in the lower tiers of the judiciary. This defies both the constitution and public demands that these powers should be the sole prerogative of the Supreme Court, thereby ensuring the separation of political power from the impartial delivery of justice. Without formal separation of the executive and judicial branches of government, systemic corruption threatens to swamp the court house. A household survey conducted by TI Bangladesh in 2005 found that two thirds of respondents who had used the lower tiers of courts in the preceding year paid average bribes of around US $108 per case. That amounts to about a quarter of the average annual income in one of the world's poorest countries. Such courts have been reduced to the status of bartering shops, with the lowest bidder risking his or her rights to property, status, or worse, liberty.

The GCR 2007 focuses largely on the judges and court staff involved in the adjudication of the law. But the justice system is much broader than that: police, lawyers and prosecutors are all involved in cases before they reach the doors of the court house; and bailiffs or similar agencies within the court system are often responsible for enforcing judicial decisions after the case is closed. Corruption at any point along that potentially lengthy line of encounters with legal officialdom can wholly distort the course of justice. The justice system is also embedded within society: the reality is that general levels of corruption in society correlate closely with levels of judicial corruption. This appears to support the contention that a clean judiciary is central to the anti-corruption fight; but might also suggest that the quality of the judiciary and the propensity of its members to use their office for private gain reflect attitudes to corruption in society more broadly.

Hence the GCR 2007 is structured as a series of concentric circles, beginning with the judiciary, and the causes and remedies of judicial corruption; then extending to the broader justice system; and finally to wider society in which the justice system is situated.

The scope of this book, which encompasses scholarly articles, reviews by TI national chapters of judicial corruption in 32 countries and empirical research on this and related topics, allows us to set up a few objectives for it. We expect that law students, trainee judges and judiciary professionals will take note of how costly judicial corruption is for its victims, but also take comfort from the fact that international standards exist to help them navigate through this sometimes difficult terrain: it is no longer the case, for example, that a conflict of interest is difficult to determine. For those activists and professionals working more broadly to stop corruption, the book can be read as a guide for analysing judicial corruption at national level and as a source of inspiration for specific in-country reforms.

We also hope this book will find its way into the hands of many people who might never visit a law library: the journalists, human rights activists and development NGOs, whose concerns overlap with ours; and the long-suffering court users, whose demands for clean judicial systems resound throughout this volume.

Dr Kamal Hossain, former Minister of Law and Minister of Foreign Affairs in governments in Bangladesh, is an international jurist, co-founder and former Vice Chairman of Transparency International.

Executive summary: key judicial corruption problems

Transparency International

Corruption is undermining justice in many parts of the world, denying victims and the accused the basic human right to a fair and impartial trial. This is the critical conclusion of TI's Global Corruption Report 2007.

It is difficult to overstate the negative impact of a corrupt judiciary: it erodes the ability of the international community to tackle transnational crime and terrorism; it diminishes trade, economic growth and human development; and, most importantly, it denies citizens impartial settlement of disputes with neighbours or the authorities. When the latter occurs, corrupt judiciaries fracture and divide communities by keeping alive the sense of injury created by unjust treatment and mediation. Judicial systems debased by bribery undermine confidence in governance by facilitating corruption across all sectors of government, starting at the helm of power. In so doing they send a blunt message to the people: in this country corruption is tolerated.

Defining judicial corruption

TI defines corruption as 'the abuse of entrusted power for private gain'. This means both financial or material gain and non-material gain, such as the furtherance of political or professional ambitions. Judicial corruption includes any inappropriate influence on the impartiality of the judicial process by any actor within the court system.

For example, a judge may allow or exclude evidence with the aim of justifying the acquittal of a guilty defendant of high political or social status. Judges or court staff may manipulate court dates to favour one party or another. In countries where there are no verbatim transcripts, judges may inaccurately summarise court proceedings or distort witness testimony before delivering a verdict that has been purchased by one of the parties in the case. Junior court personnel may 'lose' a file – for a price.

Other parts of the justice system may influence judicial corruption. Criminal cases can be corrupted before they reach the courts if police tamper with evidence that supports a criminal indictment, or prosecutors fail to apply uniform criteria to evidence generated by the police. In countries where the prosecution has a monopoly on bringing prosecutions before the courts, a corrupt prosecutor can effectively block off any avenue for legal redress.

Judicial corruption includes the misuse of the scarce public funds that most governments are willing to allocate to justice, which is rarely a high priority in political terms. For example, judges may hire family members to staff their courts or offices, and manipulate contracts for court buildings and equipment. Judicial corruption extends from pre-trial activities through the trial proceedings and settlement to the ultimate enforcement of decisions by court bailiffs.

The appeals process, ostensibly an important avenue for redress in cases of faulty verdicts, presents further opportunities for judicial corruption. When dominant political forces control the appointment of senior judges, the concept of appealing to a less partial authority may be no more than a mirage. Even when appointments are appropriate, the effectiveness of the appeals process is dented if the screening of requests for hearings is not transparent, or when the backlog of cases means years spent waiting to be heard. Appeals tend to favour the party with the deepest pockets, meaning that a party with limited resources, but a legitimate complaint, may not be able to pursue their case beyond the first instance.

The scope of judicial corruption

An important distinction exists between judicial systems that are relatively free of corruption and those that suffer from systemic manipulation. Indicators of judicial corruption map neatly onto broader measures of corruption: judiciaries that suffer from systemic corruption are generally found in societies where corruption is rampant across the public sector. There is also a correlation between levels of judicial corruption and levels of economic growth since the expectation that contracts will be honoured and disputes resolved fairly is vital to investors, and underpins sound business development and growth. An independent and impartial judiciary has important consequences for trade, investment and financial markets, as countries as diverse as China and Nigeria have learned.

The goals of corrupt behaviour in the judicial sector vary. Some corruption distorts the judicial process to produce an unjust outcome. But there are many more people who bribe to navigate or hasten the judicial process towards what may well be a just outcome. Ultimately neither is acceptable since the victim in each case is the court user. In the worst judicial environments, however, both are tolerated activities, and are even encouraged by those who work around the courthouse. TI's Global Corruption Barometer 2006 polled 59,661 people in 62 countries¹ and found that in one third of these countries more than 10 per cent of respondents who had interacted with the judicial system claimed that they or a member of their household had paid a bribe to obtain a 'fair' outcome in a judicial case.

Types of judicial corruption

There are two types of corruption that most affect judiciaries: political interference in judicial processes by either the executive or legislative branches of government, and bribery.

A. Political interference in judicial processes

A dispiriting finding of this volume is that despite several decades of reform efforts and international instruments protecting judicial independence, judges and court personnel around the world continue to face pressure to rule in favour of powerful political or economic entities, rather than according to the law. Backsliding on international standards is evident in some countries. Political powers have increased their influence over the judiciary, for instance, in Russia and Argentina.

¹ For more on this survey, including a list of countries included in it, please see the research article on page 11.

A pliable judiciary provides ‘legal’ protection to those in power for dubious or illegal strategies such as embezzlement, nepotism, crony privatisations or political decisions that might otherwise encounter resistance in the legislature or from the media. In November 2006, for example, an Argentine judge appointed by former president Carlos Menem ruled that excess campaign expenditures by the ruling party had not violated the 2002 campaign financing law because parties were not responsible for financing of which ‘they were unaware’.

Political interference comes about by threat, intimidation and simple bribery of judges, but also by the manipulation of judicial appointments, salaries and conditions of service. In Algeria judges who are thought ‘too’ independent are penalised and transferred to distant locations. In Kenya judges were pressured to step down without being informed of the allegations against them in an anti-corruption campaign that was widely seen as politically expedient. Judges perceived as problematic by the powerful can be reassigned from sensitive positions or have control of sensitive cases transferred to more pliable judges. This was a tactic used in Peru by former president Alberto Fujimori and which also occurs in Sri Lanka.

The key to preventing this type of corruption is constitutional and legal mechanisms that shield judges from sudden dismissal or transfer without the benefit of an impartial inquiry. This protection goes much of the way toward ensuring that courts, judges and their judgments are independent of outside influences.

But it can be equally problematic if judges are permitted to shelter behind outdated immunity provisions, draconian contempt laws or notions of collegiality, as in Turkey, Pakistan and Nepal respectively. What is required is a careful balance of independence and accountability, and much more transparency than most governments or judiciaries have been willing to introduce.

Judicial independence is founded on public confidence. The perceived integrity of the institution is of particular importance, since it underpins trust in the institution. Until recently, the head of the British judiciary was simultaneously speaker of the UK upper house of parliament and a member of the executive, which presented problems of conflict of interest. In the United States, judicial elections are marred by concerns that donations to judges’ election campaigns will inevitably influence judicial decision making.

Judicial and political corruption are mutually reinforcing. Where the justice system is corrupt, sanctions on people who use bribes and threats to suborn politicians are unlikely to be enforced. The ramifications of this dynamic are deep as they deter more honest and unfettered candidates from entering or succeeding in politics or public service.

B. Bribery

Bribery can occur at every point of interaction in the judicial system: court officials may extort money for work they should do anyway; lawyers may charge additional ‘fees’ to expedite or delay cases, or to direct clients to judges known to take bribes for favourable decisions. For their part, judges may accept bribes to delay or accelerate cases, accept or deny appeals, influence other judges or simply decide a case in a certain way. Studies in this volume from India and Bangladesh detail how lengthy adjournments force people to pay bribes to speed up their cases.

When defendants or litigants already have a low opinion of the honesty of judges and the judicial process, they are far more likely to resort to bribing court officials, lawyers and judges to achieve their ends.

It is important to remember that formal judiciaries handle only a fraction of disputes in the developing world; traditional legal systems or state-run administrative justice processes account for an estimated 90 per cent of non-legal cases in many parts of the globe. Most research on customary systems has emphasised their importance as the only alternative to the sluggish, costly and graft-ridden government processes, but they also contain elements of corruption and other forms of bias.² For instance in Bangladesh fees are extorted from complainants by ‘touts’ who claim to be able to sway the decisions of a shalish panel of local figures called to resolve community disputes and impose sanctions on them. Furthermore, women are unlikely to have equal access to justice in a customary context that downplays their human and economic rights.

Tackling judicial corruption

Our review of 32 countries illustrates that judicial corruption takes many forms and is influenced by many factors, whether legal, social, cultural, economic or political. Beneath these apparent complexities lie commonalities that point the way forward to reform. The problems most commonly identified in the country studies are:

1. Judicial appointments Failure to appoint judges on merit can lead to the selection of pliant, corruptible judges
2. Terms and conditions Poor salaries and insecure working conditions, including unfair processes for promotion and transfer, as well as a lack of continuous training for judges, lead to judges and other court personnel being vulnerable to bribery
3. Accountability and discipline Unfair or ineffective processes for the discipline and removal of corrupt judges can often lead to the removal of independent judges for reasons of political expediency
4. Transparency Opaque court processes that prevent the media and civil society from monitoring court activity and exposing judicial corruption.

These points have been conspicuously absent from many judicial reform programmes over the past two decades, which have tended to focus on court administration and capacity building, ignoring problems related to judicial independence and accountability. Much money has been spent training judges without addressing expectations and incentives for judges to act with integrity. Money has also been spent automating the courts or otherwise trying to reduce court workloads and streamline case management, which, if unaccompanied by increased accountability, risks making corrupt courts more efficiently corrupt. In Central and Eastern Europe, failure to take full account of the societal context, particularly in countries where informal networks allow people to circumvent formal judicial processes, has rendered virtually meaningless some very sophisticated changes to formal institutions.

² OECD/DAC Network on Conflict, Peace and Development Co-operation, Enhancing the Delivery of Justice and Security in Fragile States, August 2006, 4.

Recommendations

The following recommendations reflect best practice in preventing corruption in judicial systems and encapsulate the conclusions drawn from the analysis made throughout this volume. They address the four key problem areas identified above: judicial appointments, terms and conditions, accountability and discipline, and transparency.³

Judicial appointments

1. Independent judicial appointments body An objective and transparent process for the appointment of judges ensures that only the highest quality candidates are selected, and that they do not feel indebted to the particular politician or senior judge who appointed them. At the heart of the process is an appointments body acting independently of the executive and the legislature, whose members have been appointed in an objective and transparent process. Representatives from the executive and legislative branches should not form a majority on the appointments body.
2. Merit-based judicial appointments Election criteria should be clear and well publicised, allowing candidates, selectors and others to have a clear understanding of where the bar for selection lies; candidates should be required to demonstrate a record of competence and integrity.
3. Civil society participation Civil society groups, including professional associations linked to judicial activities, should be consulted on the merits of candidates.

Terms and conditions

4. Judicial salaries Salaries must be commensurate with judges' position, experience, performance and professional development for the entirety of their tenure; fair pensions should be provided on retirement.
5. Judicial protections Laws should safeguard judicial salaries and working conditions so that they cannot be manipulated by the executive or by the legislature punishing independent judges and/or rewarding those who rule in favour of government.

³ These recommendations draw on a more extensive list, the 'TI Checklist for Maintaining Integrity and Preventing Corruption in Judicial Systems', which was drafted by Kyela Leakey with input from a number of senior judges and other experts from around the world. These are available from TI.

6. Judicial transfers Objective criteria that determine the assignment of judges to particular court locations ensure that independent or non-corrupted judges are not punished by being dispatched to remote jurisdictions. Judges should not be assigned to a court in an area where they have close ties or loyalties with local politicians.
7. Case assignment and judicial management Case assignment that is based on clear and objective criteria, administered by judges and regularly assessed protects against the allocation of cases to pro-government or pro-business judges.
8. Access to information and training Judges must have easy access to legislation, cases and court procedures, and receive initial training prior to or upon appointment, as well as continuing training throughout their careers. This includes training in legal analysis, the explanation of decisions, judgement writing and case management; as well as ethical and anti-corruption training.
9. Security of tenure Security of tenure for judges should be guaranteed for about 10 years, not subject to renewal, since judges tend to tailor their judgements and conduct towards the end of the term in anticipation of renewal.

Accountability and discipline

10. Immunity Limited immunity for actions relating to judicial duties allows judges to make decisions free from fear of civil suit; immunity does not apply in corruption or other criminal cases.
11. Disciplinary procedures Disciplinary rules ensure that the judiciary carries out initial rigorous investigation of all allegations. An independent body must investigate complaints against judges and give reasons for its decisions.
12. Transparent and fair removal process Strict and exacting standards apply to the removal of a judge. Removal mechanisms for judges must be clear, transparent and fair, and reasons need to be given for decisions. If there is a finding of corruption, a judge is liable to prosecution.
13. Due process and appellate reviews A judge has the right to a fair hearing, legal representation and an appeal in any disciplinary matter.
14. Code of conduct A code of judicial conduct provides a guide and measure of judicial conduct, and should be developed and implemented by the judiciary. Breaches must be investigated and sanctioned by a judicial body.
15. Whistleblower policy A confidential and rigorous formal complaints procedures is vital so that lawyers, court users, prosecutors, police, media and civil society can report suspected or actual breaches of the code of conduct, or corruption by judges, court administrators or lawyers.
16. Strong and independent judges' association An independent judges' association should represent its members in all interactions with the state and its offices. It should be an elected body; accessible to all judges; support individual judges on ethical matters; and provide a safe point of reference for judges who fear they may have been compromised.

Transparency

17. Transparent organisation The judiciary must publish annual reports of its activities and spending, and provide the public with reliable information about its governance and organisation.
18. Transparent work The public needs reliable access to information pertaining to laws, proposed changes in legislation, court procedures, judgements, judicial vacancies, recruitment criteria, judicial selection procedures and reasons for judicial appointments.
19. Transparent prosecution service The prosecution must conduct judicial proceedings in public (with limited exceptions, for example concerning children); publish reasons for decisions; and produce publicly accessible prosecution guidelines to direct and assist decision makers during the conduct of prosecutions.
20. Judicial asset disclosure Judges should make periodic asset disclosures, especially where other public officials are required to do so.
21. Judicial conflicts of interest disclosure Judges must declare conflicts of interest as soon as they become apparent and disqualify themselves when they are (or might appear to be) biased or prejudiced towards a party to a case; when they have previously served as lawyers or material witnesses in the case; or if they have an economic interest in the outcome.
22. Widely publicised due process rights Formal judicial institutional mechanisms ensure that parties using the courts are legally advised on the nature, scale and scope of their rights and procedures before, during and after court proceedings.
23. Freedom of expression Journalists must be able to comment fairly on legal proceedings and report suspected or actual corruption or bias. Laws that criminalise defamation or give judges discretion to award crippling compensation in libel cases inhibit the media from investigating and reporting suspected criminality, and should be reformed.
24. Quality of commentary Journalists and editors should be better trained in reporting what happens in courts and in presenting legal issues to the general public in an understandable form. Academics should be encouraged to comment on court judgements in legal journals, if not in the media.
25. Civil society engagement, research, monitoring and reporting Civil society organisations can contribute to understanding the issues related to judicial corruption by monitoring the incidence of corruption, as well as potential indicators of corruption, such as delays and the quality of decisions.
26. Donor integrity and transparency Judicial reform programmes should address the problem of judicial corruption. Donors should share knowledge of diagnostics, evaluation of court processes and efficiency; and engage openly with partner countries.

These recommendations complement a number of international standards on judicial integrity and independence, as well as various monitoring and reporting models that have been developed by NGOs and governmental entities. They highlight a gap in the international legal framework on judicial accountability mechanisms. TI draws particular attention to the Bangalore

Principles of Judicial Conduct, a code for judges that has been adopted by a number of national judiciaries and was endorsed by the UN Economic and Social Council in 2006. The Bangalore Principles go some way towards filling this gap, though they remain voluntary. In addition, the UN Basic Principles on the Independence of the Judiciary should be reviewed in the light of widespread concern that has emerged in the last decade over the need for greater judicial accountability.

There is no magic set of structures and practices that will reduce corruption in all situations. The country reports in part two of this volume highlight the wide variety of recommendations for judicial reform that are context-specific and therefore not applicable in a general way. Differing situations may require measures that would not be helpful elsewhere. Nevertheless, the recommendations serve as a guide for reform efforts to promote judicial independence and accountability, and encourage more effective, efficient and fair enforcement. As this volume demonstrates, multi-faceted, holistic reform of the judiciary is a crucial step toward enhancing justice and curbing the corruption that degrades legal systems and ruins lives the world over.